Report on Micro Teaching

Introduction

On July 26, 2024, the Post Graduate (PG) Department of Commerce organized a Micro Teaching session aimed at enhancing the teaching skills of M.Com students. The session was an integral part of the department's on-going efforts to develop pedagogical competencies among future educators. This report provides an overview of the event, detailing the objectives, methods, outcomes, and conclusions of the Micro Teaching exercise.

Objectives

The primary objectives of the Micro Teaching session were as follows:

- Develop Teaching Skills: To provide M.Com students with practical teaching experience and refine their instructional techniques.
- Enhance Presentation Abilities: To improve students' proficiency in using teaching aids such as blackboards and PowerPoint presentations (PPT).
- Encourage Engagement: To assess and improve the ability of trainees to engage with and effectively communicate content to undergraduate students.
- Evaluate Content Delivery: To review the effectiveness of the trainees in delivering complex subjects to a diverse audience.

Overview

The Micro Teaching session involved ten M.Com students who acted as trainee teachers. The trainees conducted classes for first-year BBA and B.Com students. The session covered a range of topics pertinent to contemporary commerce education, including:

- Goods and Service Tax (GST)
- Artificial Intelligence (AI)
- E-Commerce
- Marketing

Each trainee prepared and presented a lesson plan on one of these topics, utilizing both blackboard and PowerPoint presentations to deliver their content. The training session was structured to include an introduction, objectives, a detailed overview of the topic, and a conclusion.

Results and Outcomes

1. Effective Use of Teaching Aids: Trainees demonstrated proficient use of both blackboard and PowerPoint tools. The integration of visual aids with traditional teaching methods was effective in enhancing student understanding.

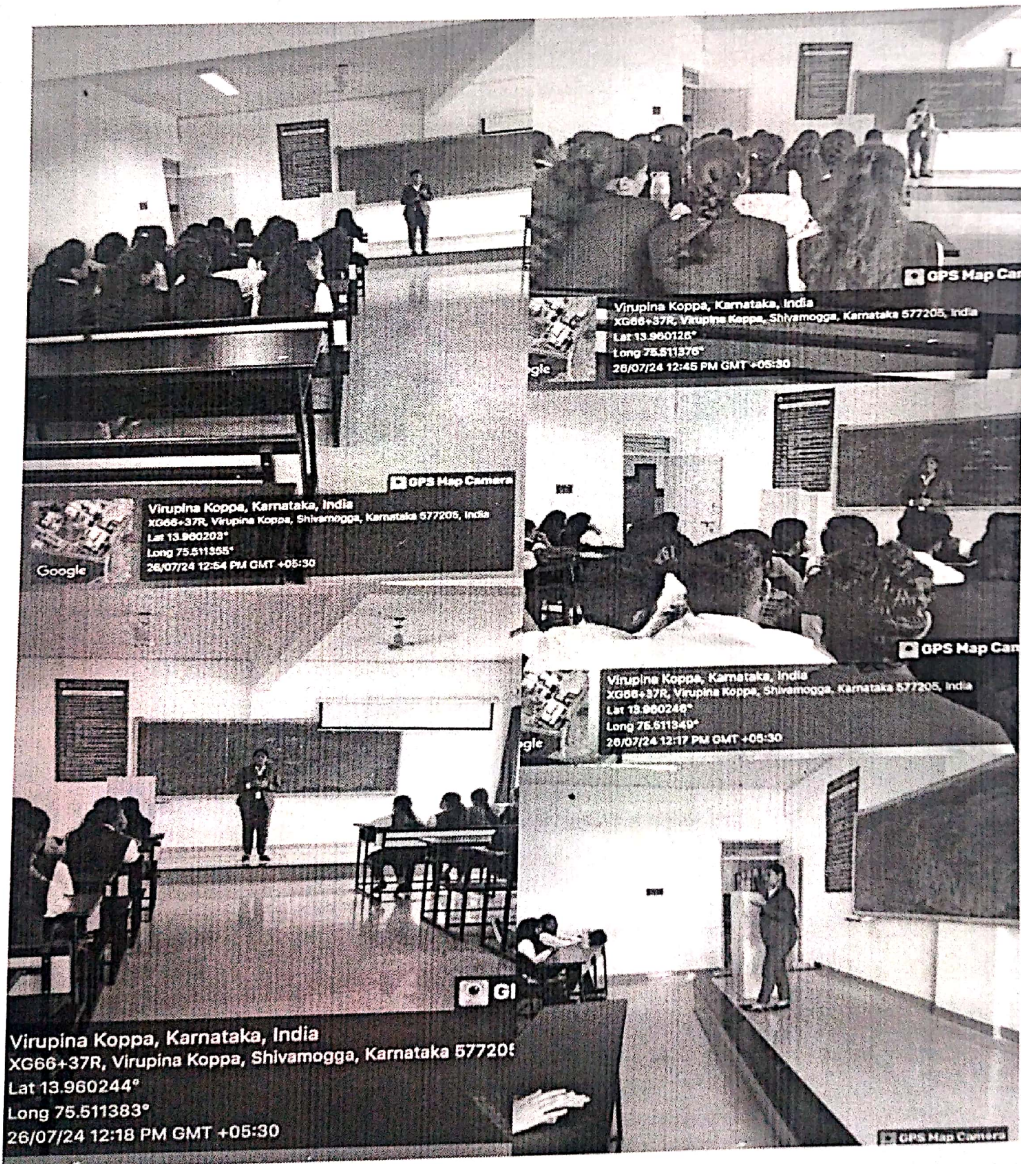

2. Engagement and Interaction: Trainees successfully engaged undergraduate students through interactive methods and encouraged participation. The incorporation of real-world examples and practical applications of the topics facilitated better comprehension and interest among the students.

3. Content Delivery: The presentations were generally well-organized, with clear explanations of the topics. However, some areas showed room for improvement in terms of clarity and depth of coverage. Specific feedback indicated that more examples and case studies could further enrich the learning experience.

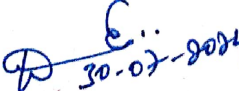

4. Feedback and Improvement: Immediate feedback from the undergraduate students and faculty observers highlighted strengths in the trainees' delivery and use of teaching aids. Suggestions for improvement included enhancing the pace of delivery and incorporating more interactive elements.

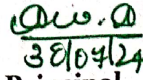

Conclusion

The Micro Teaching session on July 26, 2024, was a successful initiative aimed at developing the teaching skills of M.Com students. The event provided valuable hands-on experience and constructive feedback, contributing to the professional growth of future educators. The trainees displayed notable competence in using teaching aids and engaging with students, although there is potential for further refinement in content delivery. The PG Department of Commerce will continue to support such initiatives to ensure that students are well-prepared for their future roles as educators.
